Wonderful London

A film series by Harry B Parkinson and Frank Miller

Release date: 23 July 2012

Painstakingly restored by the BFI National Archive to reinstate their original tinting and toning, and with new piano accompaniments, the six films on Wonderful London offer a fascinating glimpse of London life during the silent era of the mid-1920s. Featuring some of the most evocative sights of the capital, they also reveal lost images that our generation will never have seen before. After a sold out screening at the 2011 BFI London Film Festival, they now come to DVD, along with six additional films and an illustrated booklet of new essays by contemporary London commentators.

In two series and over 20 films, Harry B Parkinson and Frank Miller, the directors of Wonderful London, created travelogues of different aspects of city life for cinema screenings. Aimed at exploiting the popularity of the print magazine of the same name, they were produced on a budget, but told with wit and flair. They particularly liked to highlight the contrasts in the capital, East End and West End, rich and poor, natives and immigrants – often looking beyond the stereotypes to show surprising views of the city.

This mesmerising collection features 12 films (each runs between 8 to 12 minutes long), six of which have been digitally restored by a team of experts from the BFI National Archive and six more from the series that are presented in the black and white prints made some years ago by the BFI using usual traditional film printing methods. The newly-restored films are:

Barging Through London
Cosmopolitan London

London's Sundays
Flowers of London

London's Free Shows
London Off the Track

Travelling from Chelsea to Hackney and taking in the familiar landmarks of London town – Buckingham Palace, the River Thames, Big Ben, Tower Bridge and St Paul's Cathedral, Wonderful London also reveals the unknown nooks and crannies and parts of London rarely filmed; the poorer, over-populated districts of Clerkenwell and Whitechapel and the original Chinatown of Pennyfields in Limehouse.

There are glimpses of buildings we can no longer see on the ground; the long-gone Crystal Palace and the recently vanished gates of White City, where London's first Olympic stadium now lies under the Westfield Shopping Centre; on a boat trip up the Thames we can see Fred Karno's legendary 'Karsino'. We can also take a trip through working-class London on a barge from Limehouse to Paddington Basin, via Camden and King's Cross. By bus or tram or foot, we can observe the thronging Sunday street markets and wander down the little alleyways, past the pubs and law courts – buildings that Dickens knew. And most poignantly, we can see a past generation of Londoners going about their business, complaining about the roadworks or looking with curiosity at us through the camera lens – all gone now – but strangely like the Londoners of today.

The world-renowned silent film pianist John Sweeney has recorded the new piano accompaniments featured on the DVD.
