MARTIN SCORSESE PRESENTS: MASTERPIECES OF POLISH CINEMA

Continuing throughout May at BFI Southbank, in partnership with the KINOTEKA Polish Film Festival and Filmhouse Edinburgh, will be Martin Scorsese Presents: Masterpieces of Polish Cinema. A highlight of the May programme will be a visit from the highly regarded cinematographer Witold Sobocinski, who supervised the restoration of the films he shot for this season (The Wedding and The Hourglass Sanatorium). He will be joined onstage by his grandson, award-winning, third generation cinematographer, Piotr Sobocinski Jr. (Bogowie, Róża), to discuss the evolution of their craft in Poland and abroad.

The focus of the May programme will be the significance of Andrzej Wajda and Jerzy Kawalerowicz. Five of Wajda's films will be screened, including Ashes and Diamonds (1958), a complex, morally ambiguous masterpiece starring the 'Polish James Dean' Zbigniew Cybulski, and Wajda's study of disaffected twenty-somethings Innocent Sorcerers (1960), for which he enlisted younger colleagues Roman Polanski and Jerzy Skolimowski. Also screening will be The Wedding (1972), which sees nineteenth-century Poland imagined as a grotesque and raucous wedding party, and The Promised Land (1974), a vivid portrait of ruthless entrepreneurs during Poland's industrial revolution. The final film by Wajda to be screened will be his Palme d'Or winning Man of Iron (1981); this story of government-backed espionage was filmed against a real-life backdrop of the Polish Trade Union protests of 1980. There will also be a display of international posters for these films by Wajda; sourced from the archives of the Film Museum in Łódź, these posters will illustrate a wide range of graphic styles, showing the diverse priorities of different cultures and the compelling nature of poster art.

Four films by Jerzy Kawalerowicz will screen in May, beginning with Night Train (1959), a psychological thriller about the passengers on an overnight train, including a possible murderer. Mother Joan of the Angels (1961) is a drama about demonic possession in a convent, and although notionally based on the same historical events that inspired Ken Russell's The Devils, Kawalerowicz's treatment is subtler and more psychologically acute. Also showing will be Pharaoh (1965), one of Poland's most expensive films, screening in its original full length form, having been heavily edited in the past. The final film by Kawalerowicz to screen will be his most personal project, Austeria (1982), a tale of anti-Semitic persecution during WWI.

The contribution of Wajda and Kawalerowicz to their national film culture went well beyond their own films. As the head of the Kadr Film Unit, Kawalerowicz also acted as producer on a number of Polish classics, while Wajda mentored numerous younger talents at a very early stage of their careers, including Roman Polanski, Jerzy Skolimowski and Agnieszka Holland, each of whom are represented in the season by a key early work. Polanski's riveting first feature Knife in the Water (1961) was Poland's first Oscar nominee, and established him as a world-class talent; Skolimowski's Walkover (1965) starred the director himself as a washed-up amateur boxer who is distracted from his bouts when an old university friend re-enters his life; while Agnieszka Holland's debut feature Provincial Actors (1978), an ensemble piece about warring actors, completes the programme.

A national tour of Martin Scorsese Presents: Masterpieces of Polish Cinema, presented by Filmhouse Edinburgh, with the support of the BFI, awarding funds from the National Lottery will also continue at venues throughout the UK until the end of September.

ROBERT SIODMAK: PRINCE OF SHADOWS

Also continuing in May is Robert Siodmak: Prince of Shadows, a two month season dedicated to the supremely stylish German director. Though most famous for his American thrillers of the 40s such as Phantom Lady (1944) and The Killers (1946) Siodmak displayed skill, subtlety and inventiveness in various genres. Part two of the season will showcase some of Siodmak's work with some of the biggest stars of the period, including Burt Lancaster, Ava Gardner and Olivia de Havilland. These noir films, which he preferred to shoot in the studio in order to create his atmospheric, menacing worlds with absolute control, included The Suspect (1944), The Killers (1946) and The Dark Mirror (1946). Part two of the season will also include the continuation of the extended run of Cry of the City (1948), re-released by the BFI in selected cinemas across the UK from Friday 17 April; anticipating the films of Martin Scorsese, Cry of the City is a classic awaiting rediscovery.

As the end of the 40s neared, Siodmak's films became less successful, and the popularity of the shadowy studio-shot thrillers waned; these psychological thrillers looked dated to those who longed for Technicolor and widescreen. Following his final Hollywood film noir, the Barbara Stanwyck led The File on Thelma Jordan (1950), and swashbuckling adventure The Crimson Pirate (1952), which was a 'humiliating experience' for Siodmak, he returned to Europe, where he would continue to make films until the late 1960s. The season will include two films from this latter period, The Devil Strikes at Night (1957) and The Rough and the Smooth (1959). The former was a chilling exposé of Nazi corruption based on real events and was remarkably frank for a German film of the period. The latter was one of his rare British films, a dark and almost claustrophobic drama about an archaeologist abandoning his straight-laced British fiancée in favour of a seductive German woman, which Siodmak navigates with sensitivity and flair.

SOUTHERN GOTHIC: LOVE, DEATH AND RELIGION IN THE AMERICAN DEEP SOUTH

Throughout May BFI Southbank will host a season looking at the uniquely Southern take on the Gothic tradition; an atmospheric mixture of dark humour and macabre violence, the films in the Southern Gothic season feature Southern belles mourning lost loves, eccentrics cast aside from small-town life, and dark family secrets that refuse to stay buried. The season will kick off with Intruder in the Dust (1949), an adaptation of the novel by William Faulkner that explores Southern racism with remarkable subtlety, while Robert Mulligan's adaptation of Harper Lee's beloved novel To Kill a Mockingbird (1962) and Luis Buñuel's rarely screened The Young One (1960) will also look at similar themes of racism. Also screening will Sidney's Lumet's claustrophobic adaptation of the Tennessee Williams play The Fugitive Kind (1960) starring Marlon Brando and Hush...Hush, Sweet Caroline (1964), a gaudy Gothic feast which reunited Bette Davis with Robert Aldrich following What Ever Happened to Baby Jane?

Southern Gothic's tendency towards melodrama is on display in John Huston's Reflections in a Golden Eye (1967) starring Elizabeth Taylor and Marlon Brando, and in The Beguiled (1971) starring Clint Eastwood. Eastwood's directorial debut The Beguiled: The Storyteller (1971), a glimpse behind the scenes on the film will also screen alongside The Beguiled. Also screening will be two actor-helmed films Sling Blade (1996), written, directed and starring Billy Bob Thornton and The Apostle (1997) directed by and starring Robert Duvall in a bravura performance. Completing the programme is the contemporary Southern Gothic film Shotgun Stories (2007); Jeff Nichols' low-budget debut observes a long-running blood feud between two sets of half brothers, which spills into violence after the death of their father. The season will also take on this month's Cult strand, with screenings of Two Thousand Maniacs! (1964) and Eaten Alive (1977).

NOËL COWARD ON TV: TEARS IN CHAMPAGNE

It has been said that Noël Coward fell out of fashion with the arrival of the new breed of 'angry' radical playwrights that emerged in the late 50s, yet while these new plays came to dominate theatre, TV producers continued to see the value in Coward's work, resulting in a string of fine TV productions, many of which will be screened in this month-long season Noël Coward on TV: Tears in Champagne. From consummate musician and cabaret performer to a playwright who broke new and dangerous ground, Coward's unique blend of high-octane wit and sophistication translated easily to the small screen, and provided glamorous roles for big-name TV stars including Penelope Keith, Susannah York, Joan Collins and Rula Lenska.

Beneath the glittering façade of the plays chosen for this season lies the moral complexity of a writer way ahead of his time. From the shocking representation of drug addiction in his first successful play The Vortex (Granada TV, 1964) to the hedonistic ménage-a-trois of Design for Living (BBC, 1979), Coward confronts society with its own failings, and offers no easy solutions to the dilemmas of love. Further highlights of the season will include a lecture by renowned Coward expert Barry Day on how Coward used the medium of TV in the USA to reinvigorate his career in the mid-50s and become reborn as a sophisticated cabaret artist and household name. Alongside this lecture will be a very rare opportunity to see Ford Star Jubilee: Blithe Spirit (CBS, 1956), a live US television production starring Coward, Lauren Bacall and Claudette Colbert. Another highlight will be a screening of Jazz Age: Post Mortem (BBC, 1968), unseen since its original transmission in 1968, which will be followed by a panel discussion featuring John Gorrie (director of Private Lives BBC, 1976), Dame Penelope Keith, and hosted by Alistair McGowan.

THE OTTOMAN EMPIRE: FROM THE BIRTH OF CINEMA TO GALLIPOLI

To mark the centenary of the WW1 Gallipoli Campaign BFI Southbank will screen a number of rare early films exploring the vast Ottoman Empire. The Ottoman Empire: from the Birth of Cinema to Gallipoli will bring together material from global film archives to be viewed in the context of Ottoman culture and history.

Archive programmes will include: Touring the Ottoman Empire, offering an imaginary ‘grand tour’ of the empire, from Belgrade to Jaffa, and Tripoli to Izmir through early film; Decline and Aftermath will include films which show the aftermath of Ottoman decline, such as the forced migration of Greek Orthodox and Muslim populations and the French bombardment of Syria in 1925; and Gallipoli and the End of the Ottoman Empire will reveal some of the complexities of the Gallipoli campaign in a series of rare surviving films. Plus there will be screenings of two feature films about the conflict –Anthony Asquith’s, Tell England (1931) tells the story of two friends caught in the middle of the terrible events at Gallipoli while Peter Weir’s Gallipoli (1981) stars Mel Gibson and Mark Lee as two friends who leave Western Australia to enlist in the Australian Army during WW1, eventually taking part in the Gallipoli campaign.

SCI-FI-LONDON

Sci-Fi London returns to BFI Southbank for the 15th edition this May, offering a launch-pad for science fiction and ‘fantastic’ film, plus industry events, networking and Q&As. There will be four UK premieres, one European premiere and an exciting programme of international short films.

The Death of ‘Superman Lives’: What Happened? (2015) is a fascinating documentary that delves into one of Hollywood’s most enthralling ‘what if?’ stories – the proposed 1998 Superman Lives film with Tim Burton directing and Nicolas Cage starring as Superman. Interviews with Tim Burton and Kevin Smith, plus unique source material and never-before-seen footage, gives an inside look into what might have been. Director Jon Schepp will take part in a Q&A following this UK premiere. Roland Joffé’s (The Killing Fields) new film The Lovers (2015) will also have its UK premiere, including a Q&A with Joffé; Josh Hartnett and Tamsin Egerton star in an absorbing time-travel drama which sees the 18th century collide with Boston of the near-future. The final UK premiere will be Danish director Michael Madsen’s The Visit (2015), which Madsen will also attend. The Visit is a documentary-style film which reveals the hopes, fears and rituals of mankind in an imaginary first-contact scenario. The programme is completed by the European premiere of Listening (2014), the outstanding feature debut from Khalil Sullins. With echoes of Shane Carruth’s Primer and Cronenberg's Scanners, the film tells the story of two grad students are working on a low-fi project exploring how technology could make mind-reading a routine activity.

Since its inception in the late 70s, Industrial music has come a long way from its origins as an obscure, extreme and taboo movement of passionate and creative DIY artists and musicians. Whether factory workers, students or unemployed, industrial music pioneers were all educated, artistically minded and politically aware artists who started with little-to-no musical background and went on to alter the course of popular music. This fast-

Exploring experimental cinema and artists' film

Zhang Peili's Chinese Video Art + Zhang Peili in conversation with Chris Berry, King's College London

Zhang Peili's drily humorous 30 x 30 (1988), in which a mirror is repeatedly broken and reassembled, was China's first art video. Rediscovered British features

The Bad Lord Byron + intro by film historian Michael Thornton

UK 1950. Dir David Macdonald. With Dennis Price, Joan Greenwood, Mai Zetterling. 82min + rare clips of Dennis Price. PG

A dying Lord Byron finds himself in a celestial courtroom, where his lovers bear witness to his romantic misdemeanours. Each tale unfolds in flashback as the film explores the poet's reputation as 'mad, bad and dangerous to know.' A character as complex as Lord Byron needed an actor of similar complexity to do him justice... But just as the post-war studio system couldn't accurately and sympathetically depict Byron, it was also unable to accommodate a figure as troubled as Dennis Price, who struggled with his sexuality, alcoholism and debt. This screening marks next month's centenary of the birth of Dennis Price – a talented British actor beset by demons.

A thematic journey through film

History Is Made in the Dark

The darkest period in modern history is revisited twice this month. In Margarethe von Trotta's Hannah Arendt the philosopher (Barbara Sukowa) grapples with questions of human accounting for Nazi genocide, while Joseph Losey's Monsieur Klein watches one man's accounting (art for human life) finally take himself into the equation. A Moment of Innocence is playful history (playing with the director's own history and that of Iran), and Alice's Restaurant is a lyrical vision of hope and self-doubt in the Vietnam era.

Alice's Restaurant + intro by Richard Combs Tutor/Programmer NFTS

USA 1969. Dir Arthur Penn. With Arlo Guthrie, James Broderick, Pat Quinn. 110min. 15.

Of all cinema's alternative-culture hopes and dreams in the late 60s, Arthur Penn's quasi-documentary is the saddest, most lyrical, but most hopeful, even as the dream crumbles. It's based on the 'talking blues' account by folk singer Arlo Guthrie of his arrest for littering and his escape from the Vietnam draft. The film also features Arlo's legendary father Woody Guthrie and arresting Officer Obie (playing himself).

Monsieur Klein + intro by critic and film historian Philip Kemp

France-Italy 1976. Dir Joseph Losey. With Alain Delon, Jeanne Moreau, Francine Bergé, Juliet Berto. 123min. Film. EST

Monsieur Klein is a haunting fable of dual identity set in Nazi-occupied Paris. Delon plays a gentile who lives by exploiting vulnerable Jews, but finds that he has a Jewish alter-ego who shares his name and begins to take over his life. Losey described the film's 'theme of indifference' to the (then) French president, stating: 'it is a study of identity, guilt and denial that reflects history through its psychological fallout.'

A Moment of Innocence Nun va Goldoon + intro by Richard Combs Tutor/Programmer NFTS

Iran-France 1996. Dir Mohsen Makhmalbaf. With Mirhadi Tayebi, Maryam Mohamadami, Mohsen Makhmalbaf. 78min. EST. 12A

This self-questioning documentary is also a documentary undermined by its own fictional impulses. Director Mohsen Makhmalbaf sets out to make a film about his revolutionary youth, when he was imprisoned for wounding a policeman in a political protest, but he soon finds his artistic ambitions running up against those of his cast, and against the stubborn resistance of reality.

Hannah Arendt

Germany-Luxembourg-France-Israel 2012. Dir Margarethe von Trotta. With Barbara Sukowa, Axel Milberg, Janet McTeer, Nicholas Woodeson. 113min. Digital. EST. 12A

Hannah Arendt chronicles a crucial period in the life of the political theorist and philosopher – her reporting of the Adolph Eichmann trial in the 60s that led to her book Eichmann in Jerusalem: A Report on the Banality of Evil. Blending historical footage with drama, the film looks at the controversy that surrounded her report and provides a powerful dramatisation of history, and the history of ideas.

CULT

The mind-altering and unclassifiable

Southern Discomfort

As Sight & Sound venture to the heady terrains of the Deep South for their season on Southern Gothic cinema (see pxx), what better time to pay tribute to two of the nastier products of this macabre tradition? Eschewing the bold symbolism and heady atmospherics that typically characterise the genre in favour of terror, carnage and out-and-out bloodshed, our Cult offerings for May serve up a generous double shot of Southern discomfort.

Two Thousand Maniacs!

USA 1964. Dir Herschell Gordon Lewis. With William Kerwin, Connie Mason, Jeffrey Allen. 87min. Video. 18
Playing out like a grand-guignol variation on the much-loved musical Brigadoon, Herschell Gordon Lewis' splatter classic more than deserves its place in his infamous 'Blood Trilogy.' On a former Civil War site in an old-fashioned Deep South town, the vengeful ghosts of the dead return every 100 years to claim the lives of centennial celebration revellers. It's the godfather of Southern gore films.

Eaten Alive

USA 1977. Dir Tobe Hooper. With Neville Brand, Mel Ferrer, Carolyn Jones, Marilyn Burns. 91min. Video. 18
In the fetid swamps of Louisiana, a psychotic motel owner and his hungry pet crocodile prey on unsuspecting guests. Appearing under a variety of other titles, including Starlight Slaughter and Death Trap, Tobe Hooper's unruly follow-up to his seminal debut The Texas Chain Saw Massacre is a truly perverse exercise in grubby exploitation that remains the director's most underrated film.

The Rice Bomber Bai mi zha dan ke + book launch

Taiwan 2014. Dir Cho Li. With Chien-Wei Huang, Nikki Hsin-Ying Hsieh, Michael Chang. 118min. Mandarin with EST

In 2003 a bomb disposal squad is called to deal with a 'rice bomb' in a park in Taipei. Attached is a note that reads 'Against rice importing: the government should look after its people.' Based on real events, the film follows a farmer who takes a stand against the government policies that are destroying the country's agriculture and devastating the lives of people in rural areas. Following the screening, you are invited to join us for a reception and book launch of Cinema Approaching Reality, a new study from theorist Victor Fan, which brings together Chinese and Euro-American film theory from the 1920s to 1940s.
