September - early October 2013 at BFI Southbank

With onstage appearances by Peter Morgan, Tony Palmer, Philip French, Sharmila Tagore, David S Goyer, John Akomfrah, Charles Burnett, Charlie Higson and more

Satyajit Ray, Benjamin Britten, Australia, Claude Sautet, Heroes of Comedy, GOTHIC special events, BAFTA and BFI Screenwriting Lecture Series

- GOTHIC begins at BFI Southbank with a special Future Film event with Charlie Higson; he'll talk to us about his favourite zombie movies as well as screening the best entries in a competition to produce the trailer for his latest book The Fallen. BBC Radio 3 will also be recording at BFI Southbank for special editions of In Tune and Nightwaves looking at Gothic film music and Jack Clayton's The Innocents (1961) respectively, with free tickets to both recordings available to the public
- The BAFTA and BFI Screenwriting Lecture Series returns to BFI Southbank in September with lectures from David S Goyer (frequent collaborator with Christopher Nolan and the man behind the script for this summer's Superman blockbuster Man of Steel), Susannah Grant (Oscar nominated screenwriter of Erin Brockovich, Pocahontas, The Soloist) and Tony Gilroy (BAFTA and Oscar nominated screenwriter of Armageddon, the Bourne films, Michael Clayton)
- The Satyajit Ray retrospective concludes with newly restored prints of films from the latter part of the Bengali master's career including The Adventures of Goopy and Bagha (1968), The Golden Fortress (1974) and The Stranger (1991). The season is accompanied by an exclusive exhibition of his poster designs in the Atrium; "one of the greatest directors...the chance to see the work of a real giant" – Aditya Chakraborty, The Guardian
- Benjamin Britten is one of Britain's greatest ever composers and as the world celebrates his centenary BFI Southbank looks at the ways in which Britten contributed to cinema and television, either through writing film scores or adapting operas, or as the subject of remarkable documentaries about his life and work. The season, opening on September 3, will include screenings of a re-mastered version of The Turn of the Screw (1959) introduced by director Peter Morley OBE and special previews of new films by Tony Palmer and John Bridcut (Nocturne and Britten's Endgame respectively)

- Australia: Shifting Sands begins on September 10 and heralds the forthcoming RA exhibition, addressing the idea of this landscape as another character on screen. The Indigenous Australians' belief that the country's law, language, storytelling and spirituality are entwined is presented in films from Nicolas Roeg's Walkabout (1970) and Peter Weir's The Last Wave (1977), to Phillip Noyce's Rabbit-Proof Fence (2002) and Wayne Blair's The Sapphires (2012)
- Claude Sautet was one of the most popular French directors of the 1970s and his career brought him fruitful screen relationships with actors Michel Piccoli, Romy Schneider, Yves Montand and Daniel Auteuil. This retrospective begins on September 11 and will be accompanied by the national release of his debut Classe tous risques (Consider All Risks, 1960)
- The centenary of film producer-director twins The Boulting Brothers also concludes with career highlights such as I'm Alright Jack (1959) and There's a Girl in My Soup (1970)
- John Fisher's Funny Way to be a Hero is widely regarded as the finest book ever written on 20th century comedians and comedy and now, forty years on, he has updated his masterpiece. Heroes of Comedy presents some of the best entertainers on TV, including Morecambe and Wise, Spike Milligan, Miranda Hart and The Mighty Boosh
- Special Events and Previews will include Ron Howard's new film Rush, followed by a Q&A with screenwriter Peter Morgan and an event Celebrating The Observer's Philip French as the veteran film critic steps down at The Observer after a career spanning 50 years. Plus Sharmila Tagore in conversation and a TV Preview of Sounds of Cinema: The Big Score, followed by a Q&A with Neil Brand.
- Extended Runs this month feature the continuation of Satyajit Ray's The Big City (1963), on nationwide release and Otto Preminger's masterful adaption of Bonjour Tristesse (1958) alongside 1960s US cinematic landmark – reputed to be Malcolm X's favourite film - Nothing But a Man (1964)

LEAD SEASONS:

Satyajit Ray, Part Two

This second part of Ray's career begins on a sunny note. The Adventures of Goopy and Bagha (1968) was his most popular film in Bengal, with children and adults singing its Bengali songs on the streets for months. But then his mood darkened when in 1969 acts of terrorism by young Bengalis brought a period of national Emergency. While Ray felt some sympathy for revolution, he never supported violence, and was increasingly disgusted by the immorality of politicians, businessmen and ordinary individuals. The effects of this time is evident in films such as The Adversary (1970) and Company Limited (1971). But his two detective films, The Golden Fortress (1974) and The Elephant God (1977), based on his own Holmes-and-Watson-style Bengali duo, betrayed a declining belief in official justice. In Deliverance (1988), a stark attack on the cruelty of Untouchability, Ray moved about as far from the hopefulness of Pather Panchali as it was possible to go. Ray's last three films, though not without his trademark comedy, were urgent warnings to his fellow citizens against religious fundamentalism and social corruption. Unfortunately, they were prescient, given the notorious destruction of the mosque at Ayodhya in 1992 by a Hindu mob and numerous later bribery scandals. But they were also works of art that speak to everyone. As the great photographer Henri Cartier-Bresson, a long-time Ray aficionado, truly remarked of Branches of the Tree (1990): 'It is of distressing beauty'.

Benjamin Britten at 100

This month BFI Southbank celebrates the centenary of one of Britain's most innovative composers, with Peter Morley OBE, Dame Josephine Barstow, Tony Palmer, Phyllida Lloyd, John Bridcut and Paul Kildea all appearing onstage. This season shows the ways in which Britten contributed to cinema and television, either through writing film scores or adapting operas, or as the subject of remarkable documentaries about his life and work. Britten's most obvious contributions to cinema were the remarkably varied scores which he contributed to 27 documentaries, made mainly for the GPO Film Unit - Night Mail (1936) is the most famous of these - between 1935 and 1938. However, Britten's links with the moving image are greater than this. His opera Owen Wingrave (BBC, 1971), in many ways a companion piece to the better-known The Turn of the Screw (1959), was actually composed for television, and the versions of both Billy Budd (BBC, 1966) and Gloriana (BBC, 2000) included in this season are fascinating television productions in their own right and very much more than simply filmed operatic performances. Britten was also the subject of two remarkable films, A Time There Was (1980) and Nocturne (2013), both directed by Tony Palmer, the undisputed maestro of films about composers and musicians.

Claude Sautet: The Heart of Things

Claude Sautet (1924-2000) was a contemporary of the 'nouvelle vague' but never part of it, instead he made commercial genre films that brought him great popularity in France during the 1970s. He was also a storied 'script doctor' who made contributions to the likes of Eyes Without a Face and Borsalino, before finding his true métier with his debut Classe tous risques (Consider All Risks, 1960) - to be released nationwide - and a series of triangulated romantic dramas, featuring The Things of Life (1970), starring Romy Schneider and Michel Piccolli. Whether he was mapping the private lives of small-time gangsters or the haute bourgeoisie (his favourite subject), Sautet proved a masterful chronicler of la vie quotidienne, setting many of his most memorable scenes in boulevard cafes and around dinner tables, acutely capturing the spoken and unspoken intimacies that pass between people. His is a style so deceptively simple as to pass unnoticed, though Sautet was hardly without his admirers. After Classe tous risques, Jean-Pierre Melville hailed him as France's most promising young director, while Truffaut is said to have consulted with him on many of his own screenplays. After a fallow creative stretch in the '80s that prompted him to nearly quit filmmaking, he came back, stronger than ever, with a loose trilogy on the subjects of unrequited love and the male gaze, made with some of the best young actors of their generation including Daniel Auteuil and Sandrine Bonnaire, in Quelques jours avec moi (A Few Days With Me, 1988), and Emmanuelle Béart in Un Coeur en Hiver (A Heart in Winter, 1982) and his final film Nelly & Monsieur Arnaud (1995).

Australia: Shifting Sands

Opening on 21 September, the Royal Academy's Australia exhibition proposes that the story of Australia, of Australian art, and its people is inextricably linked to its landscape: 'an ancient land of dramatic beauty, a source of production, enjoyment, relaxation and inspiration, yet seemingly loaded with mystery and danger'. This thematic is also prevalent in Australian cinema - the landscape is often described as 'another character', evoking both its potency and its agency, with the power to shape the story. This notion shifts between European settler beliefs of 'the land' as something to be owned or overcome, and the Indigenous Australian belief in 'country' in which law, language, storytelling and spirituality are entwined with the land. The referendum ensuring Aboriginal Australians would be 'counted' was only held in 1967. This symbolic change predated the resurgence of an Australian 'national' cinema in the 1970s. After Nicolas Roeg's Walkabout (1970), filmmakers such as Peter Weir and Fred Schepisi – with The Last Wave (1977) and The Chant of Jimmy Blacksmith (1978) respectively - began to ensure that Aboriginal characters counted too. But it was not until the mid-1990s and 2000s when Indigenous Australians got behind the camera, such as Tracey Moffatt with bedevil (1993) and Rachel Perkins One Night the Moon (2002) and a new wave of filmmaking voices were heard bringing with them stories of heartbreaking inequality, as seen in Rabbit Proof Fence (2002), respect for the ancient folklore from Ten Canoes (2006) – starring David Gulpilil who, 40 years on, is one of Australia's most recognizable stars – and hope for a united future The Sapphires (2012).

TV Preview: Nocturne

Isolde Films/Sky Arts 2013. Dir Tony Palmer. 134min

Nocturne is a dark coda to Tony Palmer's four other films with and about Britten, and explores Britten's uneasy relationship to the bloodiest century in history, not simply as a committed pacifist, but on a much deeper level. What is the role of the artist in such a troubled world? What are his responsibilities? What is the nature of creativity itself? What is its function? Does it have a function? Inhumanity in its various guises – now, and always – is the subject matter that preoccupied Britten, and is the subject of this film.

TV Preview: Britten's Endgame

2013 Crux Production for BBC Four. Dir John Bridcut. 120min

John Bridcut's new film explores Britten's creativity in the face of death. Those closest to him watched anxiously as he raced to complete Death in Venice in defiance of medical advice, tackling a challenging subject with resonances in his own life. His heart operation left him incapacitated, prematurely old and frail, yet he rediscovered his creative urge to produce two late masterpieces. This is a rich and poignant film about Britten's final years, and the impact of what Peter Pears called 'an evil opera'.

Preview: Utopia

Utopia is John Pilger's new feature documentary, made for the cinema and ITV. Drawing on his long association with the first people of Australia, his homeland, Utopia is both an epic portrayal of the oldest continuous human culture and an investigation into a suppressed colonial past and rapacious present. One of the world's best kept secrets is revealed against a background of the greatest boom in mineral wealth. Has the 'lucky country' inherited South African apartheid? Utopia tells a story of power and resistance in the media age.

Demdike Stare & Symphonia Cracovia

For the opening night of the inaugural Unsound London, we present an extraordinary confluence of music and film. In 2012 Demdike Stare's Miles Whittaker and Sean Canty were commissioned by Krakow's Unsound Festival to create a special work. Teaming up with cellist/composer Danny Norbury, Concealed marks the duo's first take on live instrumentation, making use of string players from Krakow's Sinfonietta Cracovia. The music references a variety of Demdike Stare's influences, from lush Morricone-style movie scores to jungle and noise. Known for working with the likes of Autechre, Warp and Skam Records, Michael England's live video explores urban decay, bleak English landscapes and Japanese dance/mythology, to tell a story that lies enticingly just out of grasp. Plus, opening performance by Anna Zaradny, one of Poland's best-known experimental musicians, renowned for her minimal electro-acoustic pieces.

2013 Channel 4/Company Pictures. Dir Tom Marshall. Episodes 1 and 2. 47min. With Sinéad Keenan, Kerr Logan, Peter Campion, Kat Reagan

London Irish follows in Channel 4's great tradition of cutting-edge comedy. It's about four ex-pat Northern Irish twentysomethings who live in London – a subject well known to the writer, Derry girl Lisa McGee. For these four friends, it's not easy navigating their way through London life. They have rubbish jobs, no money, and are surrounded by English people. Join Conor (Kerr Logan), his older sister Bronagh (Sinéad Keenan), his best friend Packy (Peter Campion), and Niamh (Kat Reagan) as they mooch their way through life and begin to realise that maybe they are getting too old for this. Maybe they all need to take a long hard look at themselves. And they will... definitely... probably...

Doctor Who at 50

Following on from last month's leap to the ninth Doctor in our continuing series, we move on to the tenth Doctor before travelling back to the 1996 TV movie. Brilliantly building on the ninth Doctor's successful era, the series would continue its ascendancy: the tenth Doctor (David Tennant) sizzled with wit and charm but could also give way to the erratic and occasionally vengeful. Back in 1996, the eighth Doctor (Paul McGann) emerged for a memorable single outing that teased viewers as to what might have been with a debonair incarnation who lived life to the full. Projecting the Archive: Pulp

UK-USA 1972. With Michael Caine, Mickey Rooney, Lionel Stander. 97min. 12A

Michael Caine stars as Mickey King, a writer of pulp fiction with titles like My Gun Is Long and The Organ Grinder. He is unexpectedly approached to ghost write the autobiography of Preston Gilbert, a faded

Hollywood star of gangster movies. King accepts but soon finds himself embroiled in a murderous political conspiracy involving the Mafia, CIA and the local Fascist party. Loosely based on the scandal surrounding the murder of Wilma Montesi in Rome 1953, Pulp's narrative is worthy of one of King's own literary efforts. Caine's Mickey Spillane-style voiceover is an affectionate parody of many a B-movie and the film is crammed with stars from the genre, including Mickey Rooney, Lionel Stander and Lisabeth Scott. Look out, too, for Dennis Price in his last role. Described in Time as 'constantly, ebulliently inventive, whether in scrupulously outrageous dialogue or in one of its many dazzling visual jokes.'

Free Seniors' Matinee: A Time There Was... A Profile of Benjamin Britten

Isolde Films 1980. Dir Tony Palmer. 106min

Director Tony Palmer will introduce and discuss this posthumous portrait of Benjamin Britten in which he balances home movies, archive documents and Suffolk locations with glorious moments from the composer's output. Extracts from operas Billy Budd, Peter Grimes and Death in Venice combine with interviews with friends, family and colleagues to provide a rich account of this major musical genius of the twentieth century.

Free for over-60s; otherwise tickets available at normal matinee price

African Odysseys

The Stuart Hall Project + Q&A

UK 2013. Dir John Akomfrah. 95min. Digital. A BFI Release

Using the haunting compositions of Miles Davis and a visual tapestry of newly filmed material, archive including television excerpts, home movies and family photographs, the founding members of the pioneering Black Audio Collective create a sensitive and emotionally charged portrait of Stuart Hall, the cultural theorist whose life and philosophy is notable for its blend of activism and intellect.

After the screening, John Akomfrah OBE will be joined by Baroness Lola Young to discuss his new work.

4 Little Girls

USA 1997. Dir Spike Lee. 103min. PG

On Sunday, September 15, 1963, white racists bombed an African American church in Birmingham, Alabama, killing four girls. To mark the 50th anniversary of this sombre event, we will screen Spike Lee's documentary about the atrocity. We will also show footage of Martin Luther King's visit to Nottingham University, six months before he was killed in April 1968.

Playwright, musician and composer Alex Pascall OBE will introduce and discuss the films afterwards. As this is a US TV production, we request a voluntary donation of £6 to cover costs. Tickets can be booked online by this donation; or obtained on the day, subject to availability.

Killer of Sheep + Charles Burnett masterclass

USA 1977. Dir Charles Burnett. With Henry G. Sanders, Kaycee Moore, Charles Bracy. 80min. Digital. 12A
A masterpiece of African-American filmmaking, Killer of Sheep is one of the most poetic dramas made about family and community. This tale of a disillusioned slaughterhouse worker, and the solace to be found in the simplest moments of life, is tender and affectionate. With striking cinematography and a gorgeous blues soundtrack, it received critical acclaim following its restoration.

Followed by a Q&A with director Burnett and producer Ray Brown with preview clips from new film 83 Days: The Murder of George Stinney Jr.

Gothic

As a prelude to our major season Gothic: The Dark Heart of Flim, we are delighted to welcome to the BFI Southbank a special performance of some of cinema's scariest music, a horde of freshly unearthed short films about the undead, and a preview of our new print of The Innocents, Jack Clayton's unnerving 1961 horror. We will also be hosting a course on the Gothic sensibility in cinema, an 11-week investigation into the darker corners of film history that runs in parallel with our screenings and events. Gothic's full BFI Southbank screening programme runs from 21 Oct to 31 Jan

In Tune

BBC Radio 3's drive-time programme In Tune, presented by Sean Rafferty, will be broadcast live from the BFI Southbank on Friday September 13th, a suitably foreboding date to discuss all things Gothic and to kick off a wider focus on film music this autumn. Pianist Neil Brand will take up his regular place at the BFI Southbank piano to elucidate on how some of the spookiest scores in cinema have worked, and The Tippett Quartet will be performing music by the master of unsettling strings Bernard Herrmann.

This Gothic In Tune is part of a wider BBC season exploring Film Music this autumn. Tickets are free but should be booked in advance

Preview: The Innocents

UK-USA 1961. Dir Jack Clayton. With Deborah Kerr, Peter Wyngarde, Megs Jenkins. 100min. Digital. 12A
Starring Deborah Kerr as the repressed governess and Peter Wyngarde as the strange figure of Peter Quint, this chilling drama was directed by Jack Clayton and adapted for the screen by Truman Capote and William Archibald. Despite a mixed response upon its original release, The Innocents is now regarded as one of the best psychological thrillers ever made.

The BFI is releasing the film in cinemas across the UK on 13 December as part of its Gothic season.

Course: Film and the Gothic Imagination

Lecturer Bev Zalcock leads our course on the emergence of Gothic cinema, from silent features to Hammer Horror. Titles discussed include The Fall of the House of Usher (1960) and The Plague of the Zombies (1965). Although the emphasis is on horror, the course investigates how the Gothic sensibility influences other genres such as the costume melodrama, as well as selected films by Powell and Pressburger.

Pocahontas + Q&A

USA 1995. Dirs Michael Gabriel, Eric Goldberg. With voices of Irene Bedard, Mel Gibson, Christian Bale. 81min. U

Upon reaching the 'new world', a group of British settlers begin to seize gold and land belonging to the native American people. Captain John Smith and Pocahontas, the daughter of Chief Powhatan, find themselves drawn to each other, but the relationship is fraught with danger as their two different worlds are brought together in Disney's sparkling animated feature.

We look forward to welcoming Susannah Grant, one of the film's screenwriters, to take part in a Q&A following the screening.

Passport to Cinema - Masquerade! Cinema and its Masks

In August, to launch our five-month-long Masquerade! season, we screened films which have dealt with identity as both social role and disguise. This month, we complete this take on our being in the world with La Ronde, La Règle du jeu, Invasion of the Body Snatchers and Walkabout. On September 16, we move into the second stage of our quest for the elusive meaning of identity, its traps, snares and delusions, with a selection of films that deal with it purely as an individual conundrum. The films will be Mulholland Dr., Persona and Zelig, with more to come in October. In November, we begin stage three: identity in the cosmic zone. – Richard Combs

La Ronde

France 1950. Dir Max Ophüls. With Anton Walbrook, Simone Signoret, Serge Reggiani, Simone Simon. 92min. EST. PG

Sex is the great equaliser in Max Ophüls' wise and witty adaptation of Schnitzler's play. A cast of aristocrats, chambermaids, poets, soldiers and prostitutes experience a merry-goround of interlocking affairs and infidelities in fin-de-siècle Vienna. Narrated by Anton Walbrook as the world-weary observer, who informs his audience, 'I'm the personification of your desire to know everything,' La Ronde is Ophüls' elegant commentary on the human comedy.

La Règle du jeu

France 1939. Dir Jean Renoir. With Jean Renoir, Marcel Dalio, Roland Toutain, Paulette Goddard. 110min. EST. PG

La Règle du Jeu is a film that accommodates differing moods, from sophistication to violence and from comedy to moments of intense poignancy. Renoir claimed that its disastrous premiere on the eve of war, 'so depressed me that I resolved either to give up cinema or leave France.' It was, for many years, only available in a shortened form. In 1959 the film was finally restored to almost its original length. Its restoration gave back one of the masterpieces of French cinema.

Invasion of the Body Snatchers

USA 1956. Dir Don Siegel. With Kevin McCarthy, Dana Wynter, Larry Gates. 80min. PG

Any extra-terrestrial visitor wanting to understand mid-twentieth century America could do no better than study Invasion of the Body Snatchers. Don Siegel's visceral science fiction fable is open to multiple readings: an indictment of compliance in the face of McCarthyism, an anti-communist parable or simply an attack on an age of conformity. Neither age, a studio-imposed ending, nor three subsequent remakes have lessened the impact nor dulled the paranoid pleasures of the original.

Walkabout

Australia-UK 1970. Dir Nicolas Roeg. With Jenny Agutter, Lucien John, David Gulpilil. 100min. Digital. 12A

After role-swaps in a Notting Hill hothouse in Performance, Nicolas Roeg subjects identity to another test in more primaevial conditions. A teenage girl and her younger brother – there are no character names – are abandoned in the outback after their father, a casualty of civilisation, self-destructs. They meet an Aboriginal boy on his 'walkabout', and a paradise beckons in the desert, but, as the critic Jan Dawson wrote, it has to compete with the school blazer.

Mulholland Dr.

USA 2001. Dir David Lynch. With Naomi Watts, Laura Harring, Ann Miller, Dan Hedaya, Justin Theroux. 146min. 15

While some are infuriated by its ambiguities and unanswered questions, Mulholland Dr. remains a seductive and unsettling experience. Intended originally as a television pilot, it is both a meditation on Hollywood and an exploration of duality and the possibility that one individual can have more than one life (themes that are also central to Lost Highway and Inland Empire). Its blend of nightmare, oneiric narrative, beauty, warmth and horror make Mulholland Dr. the definitive David Lynch movie.

Persona

Sweden 1966. Dir Ingmar Bergman. With Liv Ullmann, Bibi Andersson. 82min. EST. 15

Elisabeth (Liv Ullmann) is an actress struck dumb during a performance of Electra; she withdraws into silence. A psychiatric nurse, Alma (Bibi Andersson), tries to coax her back into the world. Bergman's study of their symbiotic relationship is simple on the surface with complexities lurking beneath, as their disparate worlds merge. With Persona Bergman gives us perhaps his most compelling and uncompromising study of the limits of communication and the riddle of existence itself.

Zelig

USA 1983. Dir Woody Allen. With Woody Allen, Diane Keaton. 79min. PG

Woody Allen's faux-documentary has given the language a new noun. Allen plays Leonard Zelig, an unassuming 1920s bookkeeper whose hunger for approval turns him into a human chameleon. Using technical wizardry to create mock newsreels and to insert Zelig into stock footage, and calling on Susan Sontag, Bruno Bettelheim and Saul Bellow as guest interviewees, this is Allen's most ambitious and most perfectly realised movie. Zelig pulls off that rare trick of being both funny and profound.

Cléo de 5 à 7

France-Italy 1962. Dir Agnès Varda. With Corine Marchand, Antoine Bourseiller, Dominique Davray. 89min. EST. PG

Agnès Varda's second feature Cléo de 5 à 7 follows the brief odyssey of a spoiled young pop singer as she awaits the verdict of a medical examination for cancer. It is a journey that takes her through a world of appearances, with friends, colleagues and strangers, as she passes the time before her hospital appointment. As Cléo observes a life suddenly rendered temporary, she moves to a realisation of her identity beneath her own public mask.

Orlando

UK-Russia-Italy-France-Netherlands 1992. Dir Sally Potter. With Tilda Swinton, Billy Zane, Quentin Crisp. 93min. Digital. PG

Commanded by Queen Elizabeth I never to grow old, that is exactly what Orlando, a beautiful young aristocrat played by Tilda Swinton, does. Based on Virginia Woolf's novel, the film sees the boy Orlando embark on a journey through time, from the Elizabethan court to the present, changing from male to female along the way. Sally Potter's painterly exposition of Virginia Woolf's novel asks profound questions about the nature of human identity, both male and female.

Satyajit Ray Course: Home and the World: The Cinema of Satyajit Ray

Writer and programmer Behroze Gandhi will lead a four-night course in our Studio as part of our celebration of 100 Years of Indian Cinema and as a complement to our Satyajit Ray season. Beginning with a look at the influence of the pictorial language of Bengali visual art as well as 19th Bengali literature, it will also consider Ray's treatment of the hero's journey, the complex roles given to his heroines and whether his use of realism was adequate to explore a wider historical landscape.

£50 for course (£40 concs) There will be extensive film extracts and sessions will reference our wider Ray season.

From Tue 3 Sept 18:30 Studio (4 weeks)

Satyajit Ray Posters

Before Satyajit Ray discovered filmmaking, he trained and worked as a graphic designer. Yet even after he picked up a camera, the Indian auteur carried on sketching; creating the set, costume and poster designs for his own films. To accompany our retrospective of Ray's films, a selection of the director's poster designs will be on show in the Atrium. Drawing on both the collections of the BFI National Archive and the Satyajit Ray Society, Kolkata, the exhibition will showcase the best of Ray's innovative compositions, from his charming collage for Pather Panchali to his ornate visualisation of Devi.
